

To meet the challenges of leadership in nursing in the 21st century, much profound personal transformation is required.

(Porter-O'Grady 2001) p1823)

There is a growing opinion that collaborative leadership, open communication and transparency are essential for effective leadership in contemporary nursing settings. Many also believe that nursing leadership is the vehicle through which nursing practice and health care policy will be shaped in the not so distant future. This represents a significant challenge for all nurses, but is perhaps especially true of Christians in nursing who have taken seriously Jesus' directive to his disciples to be salt and light in the world.
